

EDUCATION FOR A CHANGING WORLD

Contributors

Caroline M. Crawford, Ed.D., is an associate professor of instructional technology at the University of Houston-Clear Lake. Her current professional areas of interest focus on communities of learning and the successful integration of technology into the learning environment.

JoAnn Canales, Ph.D., serves Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi as a professor in the College of Education and associate dean of graduate studies. Her areas of expertise include teacher preparation, access to and equity of education for minority students, and English language proficiency assessment.

Jack Cassidy, Ph.D., is director of the Center for Educational Development, Evaluation, and Research (CEDER) at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. He is also a professor in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction and associate dean of graduate studies for the College of Education. Previously, he was president of the International Reading Association and the College Reading Association.

Tammy Francis Donaldson is a doctoral student of curriculum and instruction at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi's College of Education. She is also a teacher in the English Language Arts Department of a local high school.

Sherrye Dee Garrett, Ed.D., is an associate professor in the College of Education at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. Her areas of expertise include nonfiction, content reading, and reading diagnosis. She is also chair of the Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi Reading Conference.

Stephanie Grote-Garcia is a reading specialist at Lamar Elementary School in the Corpus Christi Independent School District. She is also a doctoral candidate in curriculum and instruction at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi.

Stephen Krashen, Ph. D., is professor emeritus at the University of Southern California. He is best known for developing the first comprehensive theory of second language acquisition (SLA). He has published more than 250 articles and books in the fields of SLA, neurolinguistics, bilingual education and literacy.

Teresa A. Le Sage, Ed. D., is an assistant professor of science education and curriculum and development at the University of Houston-Victoria. She is also coordinator for the Center of Academic Excellence in that university's School of Education and Human Development.

Frank Lucido, Ed.D., is a professor in the Department of Teacher Education at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. He is also the College of Education's associate dean of undergraduate studies. Formerly, he was superintendent for Catholic schools with the Diocese of Corpus Christi.

Barbara A. Marinak, Ph.D., is an assistant professor in the Department of Behavioral Sciences and Education at Penn State-Harrisburg. She is also the graduate program coordinator for literacy education. Prior to joining the faculty at PSH, she was assistant professor at Millersville University in Pennsylvania.

Christine L. Marroquin, Ed.D., is principal of Lamar Elementary School in the Corpus Christi Independent School District. Previously, she was principal of the Early Childhood Development Center (ECDC), the dual-language laboratory school on the Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi campus. She is a recipient of the H.E.B. Excellence in Education Principal's Award.

Paul Maxfield is research assistant for the Center for Educational Development, Evaluation and Research (CEDER) in the College of Education at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. He is also a graduate student in the Department of Counseling and Educational Psychology.

Cherie McCollough, Ph.D., is an assistant professor in the College of Science and Technology at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. She teaches science education in the Department of Life Sciences. She is co-principal investigator on a Science Talent Expansion grant and has conducted more than 20 family learning events in the Coastal Bend area.

JoAnn Montes McDonald, Ph.D., is an associate professor in the Department of Teacher Education at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. Her areas of expertise include K-12 science education, culturally relevant science, and field-based teacher preparation. She serves as the principal investigator for the TAMUCC Regional Collaborative for Excellence in Science Teaching. She is also director of activities in the Educational Center for Mathematics and Science.

Michael J. "Mike" Moody, Ed.D., is an assistant professor in the Department of Educational Administration and Research at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi's College of Education. Prior to joining the faculty at TAMUCC, Moody enjoyed a 31-year career in public education in Nebraska. During his tenure as a professional educator, Moody taught in a one-room schoolhouse and served as a school counselor, an elementary principal, and a school superintendent.

Darwin B. Nelson, Ph.D., is a professor and member of the doctoral faculty of the Department of Educational Leadership and Counseling in the College of Education at Texas A&M University-Kingsville. His research and publications on emotional intelligence and emotional learning systems have gained national and international recognition.

Kaye W. Nelson, Ph.D., is a professor and coordinator of marriage and family counseling in the Department of Counseling and Educational Psychology at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. She is a past editor of The Family Journal.

Marvarene Oliver, Ed.D., is an assistant professor and coordinator of practicum and internship in the Department of Counseling and Educational Psychology at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. She also serves as coordinator for the Counseling and Training Clinic. Additionally, she is currently the president of the Texas Association for Marriage and Family Therapy.

Connie Patchett is a doctoral student at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. Her interests focus on family literacy and teaching children through the use of nonfiction texts. She holds degrees in elementary education from The Ohio State University and special education from University of Findlay.

Barba Patton, Ed.D., is an assistant professor in the School of Education and Human Development at the University of Houston-Victoria. Additionally, she is regional director of the Texas Council of Mathematics and a member at large of the Texas Affiliate of the Association of Mathematics Teacher Educators.

Daniel L. Pearce, Ph.D., is a professor of reading at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. His current interests are reading comprehension and the diagnosis and remediation of reading problems.

Gina M. Reynolds is a bilingual ESL second grade teacher at the Early Childhood Development Center, the dual-language laboratory school on the Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi campus.

Marion S. Smith, Ph.D., is an associate professor of management science at the Jesse H. Jones School of Business at Texas Southern University.

Richard A. Smith, Ph.D., is a clinical associate professor of instructional technology and the coordinator of the Instructional Technology Program in the School of Education at the University of Houston-Clear Lake. Previously, he was director of Instructional Technology at the Houston Independent School District.

Wally D. Thompson is a doctoral student in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction at Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi. He is a veteran classroom teacher who at one time or another has taught grades 1 through 12 in public schools. Mr. Thompson is currently a teaching assistant for developmental and content area reading courses.

Piedad Ymbert is a bilingual kindergarten teacher at the Early Childhood Development Center, the dual language laboratory school on the Texas A&M-Corpus Christi campus. She also serves as an adjunct instructor in the bilingual department there. Ms. Ymbert was the Corpus Christi Independent School District's Teacher of the Year in 2001 and the 2002 Elementary Teacher of the Year for Region II.